

Freelance Trainers:

In order to reach a bigger number of Palestinians, CCRR has established a base of 45 trainers. CCRR works with a group of 15 trainers who have the administrative knowledge in CCRR principles that enable them to develop CCRR. In every project conducted by CCRR, CCRR makes sure that the new trainers get some hours of training to help them develop themselves and increase the number of CCRR trainers. Those trainers are a link between CCRR and the different schools, trainers, NGOs, and academic organizations in the region. Since September 1999 until August 2005, CCRR has trained 1300 teachers and social workers, 200 University students, 2275 school students through the Young Negotiators Project. Also, 90 journalists, teachers, and women working in Palestinian NGOs have been trained through the Media and Conflict Project. In addition, our freelance trainers are considered to be a method of evaluation for CCRR work. Their trait of being from different cities helps CCRR know about the different background of those cities.

For the long run, CCRR shows big interest in reaching an equality between female and male trainers since we believe in the effectiveness of the common work between men and women.

Regarding the motives which CCRR offers its trainers, CCRR gives them the chance to work on themselves and develop their skills. Therefore, it is important to provide them with the different services such as internet services and e-mail addresses through giving them special computers for them. CCRR also gives any kind of recommendation for its trainers in case they wished to work for other organizations.
